Sept. 4.

Dear Mr. Weisberg -

This is a difficult letter for me to write - what I must say is simply this: I have let you down! Every week I have thought "at last I'll have time to do this work" — but I have finally realized or acknowledged to myself, that it's just not in the cards. I've been in and out of town all summer, mostly out, and have had some serious family problems which have been emotionally draining - & now I'm going out of my mind with an abscessed tooth. Enough of my problems; what I feel worst about is not facing up to this sooner & getting this to Sam or back to you so someone else could get on the job. My God I feel terrible about that! Believe me it's been hanging over my head so long I have quite learned to live with it. Please don't let it be too much of a frustration to you - you've had more than your share! If ever I pull myself out of this low point in my life, I'll "sign-up" again - for a new assignment, & hope you will trust me! Shamefully, & apologetically
